Today in the Middle Ages.

Cistercian Museum Walkenried Monastery

Mediaeval monasteries were places of spirituality and the search for God, of inner reflection and tranquillity, of prayer and work as well as scientific experimentation and scholarliness. A fascinating world that is largely unknown to us today.

And yet there are astounding parallels with the present – particularly in the economic structures, which seem modern but were developed 800 years ago by Cistercian monks. With crosses and spades, but also with hammers and chisels, the men of God from Walkenried left their mark on a wide area of the Harz and its foothills.

Today in the Middle Ages

A sensitively and creatively designed museum set in Gothic architecture that brings to life a long-gone world through modern interpretations. Discover the Walkenried monks as deeply pious members of a religious order, but also as clever entrepreneurs running a highly successful business: the White Company.

Discover just how advanced the monks of the Middle Ages were in their thoughts and actions.

UNESCO World Heritage in the Harz Mountain Region

In 2010 the monastery, with its unique Gothic double-naved cloister-wing, became part of the World Heritage Site "Mines of Rammelsberg, Historic Town of Goslar and Upper Harz Water Management System", which includes one of the world's largest and most significant pre-industrial energy supply systems.

There is a good reason for the unusual decision to include a mediaeval monastery in an industrial monument: in the early 13th century the Walkenried monks, who were important operators of mines and smelting works in the Upper Harz and at the Rammelsberg, developed the first systems to supply water to their own mining facilities and fishery ponds. Their pond and ditch system in the Pandelbach Valley near Seesen, constructed around 1225, is regarded as the oldest part of the Upper Harz Water Management System.

Directly opposite the Museum is the World Heritage Info Centre (with tourist information), which is suitable for wheelchairs. A modern and interactive exhibition that is free of charge informs you about the theme of World Heritage as well as the locations and what is offered in one of the most diverse World Heritage Sites in Germany – the World Heritage in the Harz.
